Mercury dimes, Standing Liberty quarters, and Liberty Walking half dollars were all part of the elegant "Renaissance of American Coinage" (as Roger W. Burdette termed it in his award-winning book series), the early-1900s rebirth of great U.S. coin design. All three were workhorses of American commerce in their heyday, which spanned from 1916 into the 1940s, from a world war to a gilded age of progress, then through the depths of an unprecedented economic depression and a second global ...

Walking Liberty Half Dollars, called "Walkers" for short, are actively sought by a core of serious collectors. The coin's attractive design and affordable availability for all dates and of Uncirculated examples dated 1934 and beyond have done much to build a devoted following. Mint State half dollars of 1916-1933 are generally quite elusive and require buckets of cash to obtain bona fide examples.
