Even well-intentioned teachers can perpetuate the structural racism built into the fabric of our education system if they are not conscious and do not take active steps to address their own biases, and recognize how those biases can affect practice and decision-making. Recent explorations of the role of civil rights in educational disparity by the U.S. Department of Education revealed that in ...

Some of my own knowledge of self is that mainstream U.S. society treats "whiteness" as normal, a default setting. Understanding my own personal and family history, acknowledging my own power, rank, and privilege, and recognizing the dynamics of racism and identity in the U.S. all help me to create a climate where honest connections can be made across cultural divides. This kind of self ...

Despite this hesitation, I recognize the fact that all teachers need to be teaching from an anti-racist lens. Anti-racism is not just a topic for BIPOC (Black, Indigenous and people of color), and it should not be left to them to do the work. We need to make sure that all of our students develop a critical awareness of how bias and racism interact in our society, and what it means to be anti ...

UNESCO attempts to produce anti-racist handbooks for teachers. These projects reveal how anti-racist experts from the 1950s were very much haunted by 'race' and concerned with neutralizing and dampening the affective and political impact of racial conceptions in the geopolitics of post-war era. Thus, this dissertation argues that rather than indicating a definitive retreat from 'race ...
