Chie Muramatsu combines consummate storytelling with theoretical insight in this contribution to an emerging body of research on L2 learners. Her portraits of four Japanese language learners paint a vivid picture of L2 learning as socially situated lived experience in which the learner's agency plays a crucial role. - Phil Benson, Macquarie University, Australia. This is a great study of diverse social processes of individuals in language learning. It highlights the role of social agency ...

Key words: (extensive) reading, language learning, L1, L2. In my paper presented in Hong Kong (Rini, 2001), I show how second language (L2) learning can be enhanced through films; the subjects I observed was three Indonesian children. I have started to observe them since they were toddlers. The three of them were made to learn English without being aware that actually they were "taught ...

Muramatsu flutes consistently exceed the expectations of discerning flutists around the globe. Muramatsu Flutes evolved to become the world leader in professional flute-making under the leadership of the late Osamu Muramatsu, the successor of the pioneer, Koichi Muramatsu. Now, their laudable philosophy has been passed on to the next generation, lead by Akio Muramatsu. The Muramatsu flute is ...

Language learners are acquiring a system for later use" (Portraits of the L2 User, 2002). Examples and Observations "Some terms fall into more than one category. For example, 'foreign language' can be subjectively 'a language which is not my L1,' or objectively 'a language which has no legal status within the national boundaries.' There is simply a semantic confusion between the first two sets ...
