The Antonine Wall, which runs across Scotland from the Firth of Forth to the Firth of Clyde, has been described as 'Rome's Last Frontier', as it was the Empire's most northern outpost. But the real outpost, about which modern excavation is revealing more and more information, was the Gask Ridge in Perthshire. Research over the last 50 years has revolutionised our picture of the Roman occupation of the north of Scotland, well before the time of the famous governor Agricola. Moreover, the ...

Hadrian's Wall and the Antonine Wall are Britain's best-known Roman frontiers but a more northerly line is also known, on and around the Gask Ridge in Perthshire, which seems to represent the earliest fortified land frontier anywhere in the Roman Empire. Research over the last 10 years has revealed more and more about this system. In the process, it has revolutionised our picture of the Roman occupation of the north of Scotland, which now seems likely to have begun well before the time of ...

Scotland and the Roman occupation Posted on November 10, 2015 The knock-on effect in Scotland of the centuries of Roman occupation in southern Britain was considerable, but the actual Roman presence in the north was fleeting. The first incursion came in the summer of AD 79 when the Roman governor Agricola led his army deep into Caledonia.

The following 100 years saw a cycle of advance into and retreat from Scotland, until the Romans abandoned the Antonine Wall completely. This book examines the Flavian, Antonine and Severan conquests of Scotland and the fortifications along Rome's northern frontier, and it explores the archaeological remains and places them in historical context.

The late Flavian occupation of northern Scotland was short-lived. The fortress at Inchtuthil was never completed and, while northern forts have produced a fair number of coins dated AD 86, no coins from 87 have been found, despite their relative abundance elsewhere. It is, thus, reasonable to conclude that the Flavian withdrawal began in AD 86/7, before the coins of AD 87 had the opportunity ...

The Picts' name first appears in 297 AD and comes from the Latin Picti, meaning 'painted people'. By 306 AD however, united and better organized, the Emperor Constantius Chlorus was forced to protect his northern frontier against Pictish attacks on Hadrian's Wall. On several fronts throughout Europe the tide was slowly turning against ...

This may be seen as the first ever attempt by the Roman Army and its engineers in building a linear line, dividing the mountains of the Highlands from the much more fertile lands in the south of Scotland. The main line of these earlier forts and watch towers ran across Perthshire, Kinross and Angus.

At any rate, drawing on archaeological data combed from the Gask Ridge watchtowers and surrounding forts at the mouths of nearby Glens, and of the legionary fortress at Inchtuthil on the river Tay, they conclude that the occupation of northern Scotland better fits a time-frame of 15-20 years, and not the generally accepted 7-8 years afforded by a literal reading of Tacitus' "Agricola" - our literary source written by the son-in-law of the governor accredited with the conquest. Their argument ...

The Flavian dynasty was a Roman imperial dynasty, which ruled the Roman Empire between 69 AD and 96 AD, encompassing the reigns of Vespasian (69–79), and his two sons Titus (79–81) and Domitian (81–96). The Flavians rose to power during the civil war of 69, known as the Year of the Four Emperors. After Galba and Otho died in quick succession, Vitellius became emperor in mid 69.

The Gask Ridge frontier has seen action in every one of Rome's Caledonian campaigns and some of the research even shows that it was the first chain of forts in northern Britain, predating the other walls. Some believe it is the first such frontier in the Empire! It consists of a long line of forts, watchtowers, and temporary marching camps that run from the area of Stirling, on the Antonine ...
