Romes Greatest Defeat Massacre In The Teutoburg Forest

Simply put, the Teutoburg disaster was not "Rome's greatest defeat", however one looks at it. Losses resulting from the disasters of Arausio, Cannae or Carrhae were much larger whereas the both the losses and the consequences of the disastrous defeat of Adrianople where the Emperor Valens himself was killed were probably more severe also. The sub-title "Massacre in the Teutoburg Forest" is another example of inaccurate hype. It was not a massacre but a running battle or a series of ...

Rome's Greatest Defeat : Massacre in the Teutoburg Forest by Adrian Murdoch [Although] Arminius and Varus are, naturally enough, part of Germany's national consciousness, their names often warrant barely a flicker of recognition in the English-speaking world. It is fair to say that Roman Germany as a whole, specifically the country's early history under the first emperors, has been conspicuously ignored outside Germany. Even in the academic field, only a handful of critical book-length ...

The Battle of the Teutoburg Forest. Rome's greatest defeat

Rome's greatest defeat came in the Battle of Teutoburg Forest, which I would rather label the Massacre or Ambush at Teutoburg Forest. To me, a battle results from a conscious decision on the part of two commanders to engage one another. There was no decision like that in this case because the Romans were not in a position to defend themselves. The attack took place in 9 A.D. against the ...
